Important! You must pass the Physical Activity Readiness Questionnaire (PAR-Q) and/or consult with your doctor prior to taking this field test. The PAR-Q can be printed by going to www.LockOnFitness.com/ExercisePrep.aspx.

This test is intended for informational purposes only and should not be construed as medical advice, medical opinion, diagnosis or treatment. Find a level, one-mile distance you can walk. The best place to find one is at a high school or college track, but a road or street may be used if you can ensure your safety. If you are using a school track each lap around the track is one-fourth mile. If you are using a road or street you will have to measure one mile and note where the last one-fourth mile starts.

Make sure you have a friend or acquaintance with you and that there is a way to contact emergency personnel if needed (cell phone or pay phone).

Start out by warming up for five minutes. After warming up, walk as fast as you comfortably can for one mile. The first three-fourths of a mile is used to get your heart rate up and stabilized; the last one-fourth mile is the one that you will measure.

If you have a heart rate monitor, start it at the beginning of the last one-fourth mile (last lap if at a school track) and stop it at the end of the one-mile walk. Check to see what your average heart rate was during the last one-fourth mile. If you don't have a heart rate monitor, take your pulse for six seconds at the end of the one-mile walk and multiply by ten.

Record your last one-fourth mile average heart rate (or ending heart rate): _____ bpm (beats per minute)

Determine your physical condition:

- Poor Condition You do not exercise regularly or haven't exercised in the last eight weeks (even though you may be thin).
- Average Condition You exercise three times a week for an average total of one hour per week or walk/run an average of three miles per week
- Excellent Condition You exercise regularly for more than a total of one hour per week or walk/run an average of five miles or more per week.
